You may have to do some research if you do not know how to work on social media sites. Here is a short list for the basic services that most people use on social media sites: Facebook, Twitter, Google+, LinkedIn, MySpace and Tumblr. The most popular are Facebook and Twitter. You need a separate web page for each social media site. On each web page you need to enter a username and password. This is what is referred to as your . Facebook's terms of use and privacy policy state that users who use Facebook may "post information on other websites or forums in a way that makes it available to other people". These can include personal information, such as your age, political beliefs, religious or sexuality. The site's terms of use further specify that it will not take any responsibility for any Facebook user's use of such information. "Please be aware that Facebook does not control the way third parties may use information that you make public, and you share that information at your own risk." Twitter's terms of use and privacy policy state that users may "use Twitter to share information about your business or your brand" and that "if you use Twitter to promote information or a product or service or some other commercial content, you must include a disclosure with that content that gives people the ability to know who you are and the nature of your relationship with the company." The site's terms of use further specify that it will not take any responsibility for any Twitter user's use of such information
