ge plastics developed a high-speed testing system to locate defects in the system. this was part of a larger project to reduce the number of point-to-point faults in the electrical system of one of the world's tallest buildings. the system allowed engineers to correctly identify the locations of point-to-point faults in the electrical system, and it did so quickly and efficiently. the high-speed testing system consisted of a probe that went to where the fault was located and confirmed that the cable was in the proper position. it then identified the cable type and tested its current rating. when lifting a beam, never lift over the point of support or the load will fall. use chain or chainfall, a saddle or a sling from a pulley system to prevent the beam and load from swinging. if the center of the load is not level, remove the excess material so the load lies evenly on the beam. make sure the appropriate amount of force is used when lifting the load. never lift by hand. use a chain or rope-chainfall from a pulley system. another good method is to put a large, smooth wagon wheel under the load. then attach a cable to the beam through the hole in the center. to determine whether the chains are holding the load or the load is falling off the beam, apply a load up to the load height. if the beam slips off the chains, make sure the chains are tight. if the beam slips off the pins, tighten the screws attaching the load to the beam. follow standard oil-based or wax-based lubricants in your application. do not use mechanical lubricants that freeze.

when the 172.101 table specifies that a hazardous material be packaged in accordance with this section, only 4g fiberboard boxes, with inner packagings of polyethylene or other suitable material, are authorized. fiberboard boxes must be reinforced and insulated and sufficient dry ice must be used to maintain the hydrate or acid in a frozen state during transportation. if the maximum rated load of a braking system is to be exceeded for the purposes of connecting or disconnecting a brake line, an overload relay in the system shall automatically disconnect the brakes for the minimum time period necessary to accomplish the connection or disconnection. the relay shall be capable of automatically disconnecting either single or multiple brakes in the braking system. if the load capacity of a forklift is to be exceeded for the purposes of connecting or disconnecting a brake line, an overload relay in the system shall automatically disconnect the brakes for the minimum time period necessary to accomplish the connection or disconnection. the relay shall be capable of automatically disconnecting either single or multiple brakes in the braking system. the brakes must be kept in good working order. brakes must be set at a proper distance for the load they are to bear. brakes must be adjusted so they can be used with brake shoes that are properly adjusted. if the forks of a boom truck are locked out, the load handled must be considered when setting the brakes. when forward motion is not required, the brakes should be set low to prevent the rig from dragging. 5ec8ef588b
